

Emily Pearson

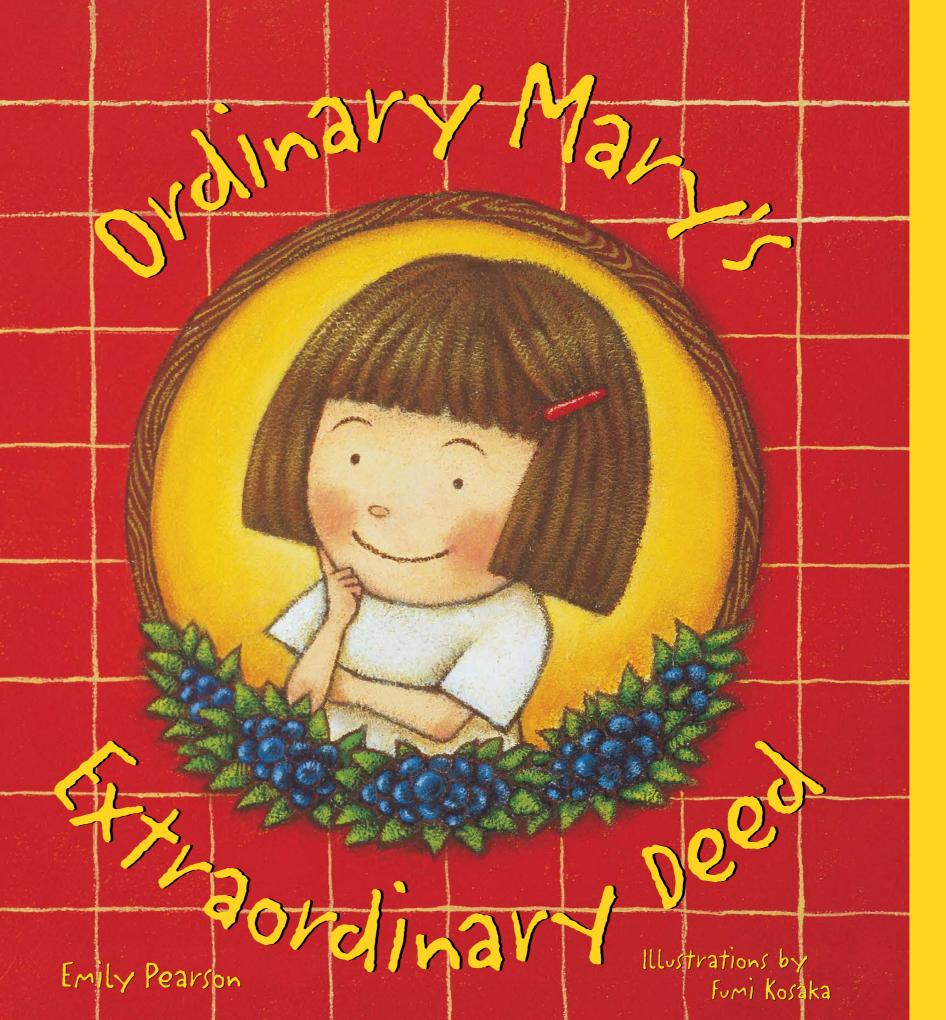

is the co-author of Fuzzy Red Bathrobe: Questions from the Heart for Mothers and Daughters. Emily lives in Salt Lake City, Utah. This is her first children's book.

Fumi Kosaka

was born and raised in Japan and studied illustration at Brigham Young University.

Ordinary Mary's Extraordinary Deed is among the first of many children's books she has illustrated.

Ordinary Mary's Extraordinary Deed

Can one good deed from an ordinary girl change the world?

It can when she's Ordinary Mary—an ordinary girl from an ordinary school, on her way to her ordinary house—who stumbles upon ordinary blueberries. When she decides to pick them for her neighbor,
Mrs. Bishop, she starts a chain reaction of kindness that multiplies around the world.

It's a feel-good story that inspires and celebrates a world full of ordinary deeds!

Well, Ordinary Mary picked the ordinary berries and brought them in a big brown bowl to Mrs. Bishop's porch.

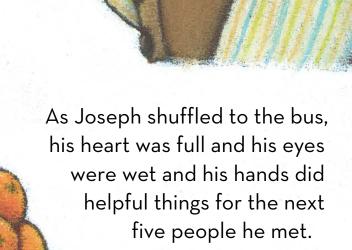

What? Left berries in a big brown bowl on Mrs. Bishop's porch?

That sneaky kid! She did!

One of those five was Joseph, old and bent and gray, in front of him in line at the produce stand.

When he said, "I guess I counted wrong. I don't really need these oranges," little James reached out to him with an orange from their basket, and Mario put a coin in Joseph's hand and said, "Here, take this. The oranges are on us."

One of those five was Sahar, a college girl who was off to see the world and stopped at Joseph's shop.

When her bag broke and her things fell all over the floor, she said, "Oh, what will I do?"

Joseph said, "This is for you," and he gave her a new bag woven with his own hands in red and purple and green.

"Oh, thank you!" she said,
"It's the loveliest bag I've ever seen!"

When Sahar left, she felt sunny as noon, and she just had to shine on five people soon.

One of those five was Kate, a woman on vacation who wanted to see a show she'd heard was a sensation.

"Oh, no!" she said. "It's sold out? But I'm going home tomorrow." And her face filled with sorrow.

Amara held out her ticket. "I live here," she said. "I can go anytime—take mine."

Kate loved the show and was so touched that she thought buying five presents for five people back home would really be fun.

And one of those five presents was a little heart necklace for Mary, her niece, and you should have seen her eyes light up in surprise!

